AMERICAN INDIAN MOVEMENT

Civil Rights in Native Communities

The story of American Indian rights is written into the fabric of American history. This program will look back at the many legal battles, policies, treaties, and protests. It will also include a discussion on American Indian rights activities taking place across the country, including the protests at the Dakota Access Pipeline. Krystian Sisson, Muscogee Creek, MSW student at Washington University's Brown School, will talk about how government policies affect the lives of American Indian communities. She'll be joined by a panel of students who will discuss civil rights issues within their tribal communities.
